

The No Call List must not be weakened! Since its beginning, our family has a greater sense of privacy and intimacy. Our time together, on weekdays often limited to the evenings, has now actually become family time: not a time when the phone must be answered so often to a solicitor, and increasingly later in the evening (as late as 10 pm- try having young kids going to bed as the phone keeps ringing!). The peaceful time together is so valuable, especially at a time when it is difficult to bring everyone together.

There are plenty of other avenues for advertisers to reach consumers, and I, for one, would never commit to anything over the telephone. I know few others who would. The first thing we say is "send me something in the mail."

Please let us keep our Family Time and our dinners in one sitting.

Thank You.

I'm aware this is past the Feb. 2 deadline but I only found out about this issue now, as I was going to sign my NEW PHONE NUMBER up for the NO CALL LIST. I hope this will still be received, and that there will be a No Call list for my number to go to.
